

Todd Consolini
Chief of Counterterrorism Operations
U.S. Department of Homeland Security
Federal Protective Service

Todd Consolini is the chief of counterterrorism operations for the Federal Protective Service. In this position he serves as the agency's primary advisor on terrorism threats to U.S. government facilities and is one of the agency's subject matter experts on security risk management programs.

Prior to assuming this position, Todd served 15 years as a federal law enforcement commander and supervisory physical security specialist, overseeing the protection of over 600 federal facilities. Additionally, since 2005 he commanded FPS emergency responses to Gulf Coast hurricanes and he led protection operations following major criminal incidents that negatively affected federal government operations. As a U.S. Marine Corps officer, he commanded infantry units and led force protection and WMD exploitation teams overseas and in combat zones.

Todd holds a master's degree in Security Studies from the Naval Postgraduate School and is a graduate of the FBI National Academy.
